Vaccinations

We offer vaccination to vaccinate against feline calicivirus, herpes virus, panleucopenia and feline leukaemia. Vaccination boosts the immune system, aiming to prevent infection from these diseases; the initial course consists of two injections 3-4 weeks apart; annual boosters are then needed to maintain this

Worming

Wormer treatments enter the blood stream to kill the worms, because they do not last more than 48 hours it is important that this is done regularly, especially for cats that are regular hunters. For adult cats (over 6 months of age) we suggest worming every 3 months with a broad spectrum product; we will discuss the best product and program for your pet individually at the time of their vaccination.

Flea & Tick Treatment

These are generally liquid pipettes which are emptied onto the back of the neck and stay in the skin. They normally last approximately one month, your vet will be able to advise you on the best product for your pet, how, and when to apply it.

Neutering

Neutering helps control the stray population but also can be a great health benefit to your pet. Your cat can be neutered at any time as long as they weigh 2kg but before 6 months is ideal as most cats can reach reproductive maturity past this point. Cats will breed any time after six months of age, if the opportunity arises so please ask if you have any questions about neutering, or are unsure of the health benefits.

Identification & Microchipping

A microchip is a small inert 'chip' with a unique number that can be read by a microchip scanner. A database is used to register the unique number with your details and your pets' so should they go missing, vets, and the police are able to contact you. It is very important to keep your contact details up to date, and that your vet regularly scans the chip to check its location and correct functioning.

Despite the challenge of keeping collars on a tag and collar are also can recommended particularly in built up areas where unidentified cats are often fed by several households unaware they have an owner; we are able to advise you on the exact wording and have a range of tags to choose from.

Diet

There are a huge range of sources and an increasing number of cat foods available including age specific diets, weight loss diets (should these become necessary) and those to help with specific long term diseases. Our vets and nurses are able to advise you on the most suitable diet for your pet. Remember; always change diets gradually over at least one week.

Insurance

Vet insurance is available to help with the cost of veterinary fees. There are several companies out there with differing policies and levels of cover. It is important to compare and read the small print to make an informed choice
